University College London (UCL) is one of the world's top universities. With an annual turnover exceeding £1.5 billion, it is a major research and education hub in London and globally. UCL's staff and former students have included over 34 Nobel prize winners. It is a truly international community: More than one-third of our student body comes from 150 countries and nearly one-third of staff are from outside the UK. UCL offers more than 200 undergraduate programmes and more than 400 taught postgraduate programmes.

The UCL School of Management offers BSc, MSc, MBA and PhD programmes in Management, Entrepreneurship, Finance, Business Analytics, and Information Technology. See mgmt.ucl.ac.uk for more information about the school.  The school is a thriving business school based in London with strong emphasis on research. The School consists of five research groups: [Operations & Technology](Operations & Technology) , Organizations & Innovation, Strategy & Entrepreneurship, Marketing & Analytics, and Finance, Accounting & Economics. Salary is competitive with US business schools, and research facilities and support are excellent. The teaching load is light and designed to maximize research time. Besides the main UCL Bloomsbury campus, the School operates in its new Canary Wharf campus at the heart of London financial district.

The UCL School of Management encourages diversity and a positive culture among all faculty, staff, and students. Our school is committed to building an intellectual community in which diversity, fairness, and inclusion are valued, and we encourage applications from women and other minorities. UCL is an Equal Opportunity Employer.
